This six month cohort is for pastors and other church leaders to learn together about the congregational formational practices for helping church members become calm and committed to the necessary losses for the sake of furthering the mission of Christ in a rapidly changing world. Selected participants would be those who want to experiment with learning how to reframe discipleship for forming church members to have the capacity to face their missional, adaptive challenges. Each participant will be asked to read some materials, meet monthly with the cohort and convene a small group in his/her church as a lab for putting into practice what we are learning together. The goal of the cohort is to experiment and learn together by applying some of the best insights of spiritual formation writers to the challenge of leading adaptive change.
